One sunny day, Flinto the octopus, Benji the monkey, Bobo the elephant, and Mia the toucan were hiking to Mount Chumba Lumba in the middle of LuLu forest. They planned to camp on the mountain. They carried tents, food supplies, and games that they could play.
When they reached the campsite, they noticed another tent there. Sitting outside it were a crocodile, a deer, and a snake.

“Hello, welcome! Can we help you set up your tents?” asked the snake.

“Thank you, but no,” said Benji.

“Why didn’t you want their help, Benji?” asked Flinto.

“Because, if they help us now, next they will ask us to share something. I don’t want to share!”
Flinto and the others did not agree, but kept quiet and continued to set up their tent. When they settled down to cook their food, the other campers were doing the same. “Would you like to try some beetle soup?” asked the crocodile.

“No, thank you!” said Benji irritated. “Actually, I would love to try,” said Bobo. “You should try our pasta!” Benji sat sulking because he didn’t like to share.
The next morning, Benji heard voices outside the tent. He stepped out to see his friends sitting with the others, getting ready for a trek to the peak. He got angry when he noticed his friends sharing once again.

“Don’t share our sunscreen!” said Benji, snatching the tube from the deer’s grip.

As they climbed the mountain, they enjoyed the scenery. They put their bags down to take a dip in the waterfall. Bobo ran towards the waterfall showing off his diving skills. But, he pushed all their bags into the water by mistake.

“Our bags!” cried Mia, “The waterfall is taking them away.”
The four tried swimming behind them, but the water was too fast.
“What are we going to do?” wailed Benji.
“What are we going to eat?” asked Mia.

The sun was setting as they returned to their camp. The others were cooking their food.
“Just the smell is making my stomach rumble,” said Bobo sadly.
Since they didn’t have any food, they were forced to go to bed with their stomachs empty.
As the night set in, the four friends were feeling very hungry.
“Maybe we can search for fruits in the forest,” said Mia.
“Maybe we can steal some food from the other camp,” suggested Benji.
“Or maybe we can just ask them,” said Flinto.
“Why would they share?” asked Benji in surprise.

Before anyone could reply, the crocodile called out.
“Hey, we noticed that you didn’t eat dinner. Would you like to join us?”
“We would love to. But, we have nothing to cook. All our food got washed away in the waterfall,” said Flinto.
“Oh, that is not a problem. We would love to share,” said the deer, extending his hand to Benji.

“I am sorry,” said Benji, ashamed by his earlier behaviour. They all sat around the campfire, told stories about their adventures, and drank hot broth that filled their bellies.
